THE LANTERN'S GRIN

I followed the glow where shadows lean,
Past the hollow field, the unsen,
A carved grin lit with embr eye,
The lantern waits where bones lie dry.

It flickers low with laughing flame,
Calling my name, it knows my name,
Within its glass the hollow grin,
A promise whispered, "Let me in."

The vine-wrapped skulls in silent row,
Their empty sockets watch below,
The raven perched on bony arch,
Croaks a dirge for the midnight march.

Do not approach the light, beware,
The grin grows wide in damp night air,
For those who meet its amber gleam
Are trapped within the lantern's dream.

Now the door is carved from pine,
The lantern's grin is now is mine—
Come, take the path, if you dare tread,
To join the chorus of the dead.
